

Centre for Fiscal Studies

The Fraser Institute has an opening for a qualified researcher in our Centre for Fiscal Studies, which includes both taxation and government spending at both the federal and provincial levels. The level of the position will depend on the experience and education of the successful applicant but can range from junior to senior. This position is ideal for a strong writer and researcher, with an interest in public policy and background in economics or a related discipline, who values an active learning environment and is looking for a rewarding and challenging career with room for advancement in a team of policy experts.

Reporting to the Director, Fiscal Studies, the researcher will play a critical role in executing the research agenda for the Fraser Institute's Natural Resource Centre.

Here's what you'll do:

- Work collaboratively to research and write policy papers, including conducting statistical analysis and communicating the findings of your research through various media channels;
- Undertake research on tax and government spending issues at both the federal and provincial levels;
- Write op-eds and blogs; and
- Stay up-to-date on issues related to the research centre's areas of responsibilities.

About you:

- You believe in our mission and want to help improve the quality of life for Canadians their families, and future generations by studying, measuring, and sharing research.
- You have a masters' degree in economics or a related field.
- You have strong writing skills and depending on your experience level, a proven record of producing written products on time.
- You're committed to empirical, evidence-based policy.
- You have strong communication skills including the ability to write in a clear manner to a non-technical audience.
- You have the ability to work independently and in a team environment.
- You're able to work under pressure and meet deadlines.

What we offer:

- An opportunity to work alongside some of the most accomplished policy experts in the country.
- A great work culture in an active learning environment.
- An opportunity to make a difference.
- An attractive compensation package, which includes extended health and dental benefits and a great RRSP plan.
