NEWS RELEASE

Adding UN declaration on Indigenous peoples on top of Canadian law will lead to legal chaos

March 10, 2020
For Immediate Release

VANCOUVER—The federal government should recognize that its plan to legislate a United Nations declaration conflicts with Canadian constitutional law and will likely cause legal chaos, finds a new study released today by the Fraser Institute, an independent, non-partisan Canadian public policy think-tank.

“Inserting yet more ambiguous language into Canadian law, which will inevitably affect the approval process for major infrastructure projects in Canada, is unwise and would likely lead to even more uncertainty,” said Tom Flanagan, Fraser Institute senior fellow and author of Squaring the Circle: Adopting UNDRIP in Canada.

The federal government has several times noted its plan to table legislation based on the United Nations Declaration of the Rights of Indigenous People (UNDRIP).

The study finds that key elements of the declaration, which calls for the “free, prior, and informed consent” of Indigenous peoples before any development projects take place on land they make claim to or inhabit, are not consistent with existing Canadian constitutional law.

Nevertheless, in November the Government of British Columbia passed its own legislation based on the declaration.

And according to the study, the ambiguity of B.C.’s new law—which seeks to “ensure the laws of British Columbia are consistent with the Declaration” while also stressing that “nothing in this Act is to be construed as delaying the application of the Declaration to the laws of British Columbia”—leaves the door open for wide interpretation.

Indeed, several Wet’suwet’en hereditary chiefs (who opposed the Coastal GasLink pipeline in B.C.) claimed the new legislation gave them the right to veto the project’s construction.

“If natural resource projects continue to be delayed or scuttled altogether, many First Nations that see resource development as their best chance for economic progress will continue to struggle with poverty,” Flanagan said.

(30)

MEDIA CONTACT:
Tom Flanagan, Senior Fellow, Fraser Institute

To arrange media interviews or for more information, please contact:
Mark Hasiuk, 604-688-0221 ext. 517, mark.hasiuk@fraserinstitute.org

Follow the Fraser Institute on Twitter | Like us on Facebook their families and future generations by studying, measuring and broadly communicating the effects of government policies, entrepreneurship and choice on their well-being. To protect the Institute’s independence, it does not accept grants from governments or contracts for research.
Visit www.fraserinstitute.org